Customer Reviews

I feel horrible about giving a one-star review, and I normally do not. I simply don't review things that aren't outstanding for me, so I don't have to do this. But the level of immaturity, ignorance and/or irresponsibility here is just egregious. Look, horse poop is 100% natural, 100% organic and NOT a smell you would want to incorporate into a perfume. Asafoetida is useful, natural, organic and it STINKS. The claim is made that "natural" or "organic" things won't ever stain anything. What do you think people used to dye their clothing, their hair and their skin before we started using petroleum for that? Henna is so good at it they use it for tattoos. I'm not sure which dismays me more - that someone who claims to know what they're doing is telling you that you can't mix things that will smell bad or that there are people who will believe it and spend large amounts of money on things that won't work together. And that is to say NOTHING of the irresponsibility of the claim that natural things can't react with your skin to create rashes, allergic reactions or burning sensations. Have you ever touched an all natural, 100% organic poison ivy plant? I need to use natural skin care, cosmetics and scents because my skin is so sensitive. And they are a lifesaver for me. But I've tried enough things that I'm not allergic to to realize that some things just don't work on my skin, and claiming that this is impossible is setting someone up for a horrible experience rather than a wonderful one. I read the other 1-star review to make sure I wasn't just repeating what had been said, and though I am to some extent, the claim in the response to that review was that they had "fixed" the problems by noting that you can be allergic to natural things (peanuts, anyone?).
